sheets and towels

Bamboo bedding is one of the most luxurious textiles you could choose for your organic sleep system. Follow our care guide in order to keep your bamboo sheets and towels as beautiful and functional as they were on the first day you purchased them.

In general, it's best to wash bamboo sheets in cool water in order to limit the possibility of shrinkage and minimize wear on fiber integrity (hot water wears fabrics much faster than cool water). Use a natural laundry detergent free of phosphates and harsh chemicals to make sure you respect the planet with your green bedding care. And remember, because bamboo is generally very soft, you most likely will not need to use fabric softeners.

Once your bamboo sheets have been put through a wash cycle, we recommend that you line-dry them whenever possible. Again, this helps to minimize the chance of shrinkage. But the heat of a gas or electric dryer will also wear your fibers much more quickly than air-drying, shortening the life of your bamboo bedding.

If you are not able to line-dry your bamboo sheets, then consider using a machine dryer for a short period and line-drying for the remainder of the process. If nothing but a dryer will do, put your bamboo sheets in at the lowest or perma press cycle setting. And be sure to avoid over-drying by pulling the bamboo bedding out as soon as it has completed the cycle. Smooth the fabric and fold them while they're still warm for best results.
